No definite plans have yet been made, but according to the ents made by the state organizer, Miss Emily Pierson, at the board meeting of the Connecticut Woman Suffrage association, held at the Hotel Stratfield Monday, the campaign will begin about January 15. The starting place will in all probability be near the New York line and the party will advance, steadily from there to the northern part of Hartford county, Miss Plerson will be aided by an assistant alzer, if one can be procured by that time, and if possible she will have as auxiliary workers six other young men who will assist at the meetings. it is the purpose of the society to visit another. every city that can be reached by trolley. THEIR MOST AMBITIOUS CAMPAIGN.

Before the month of March has blustered into the world, every town and city in New Haven, Fairfield and Hartford counties situated on a trolley line will be invaded by the suffragists. There will be no escaping them. With them, McManigle has told us since that they never saw a sign of the results of this win-world to see if any one was follows.

It's the thing the operative has to learn to follow a man on a case at all. He has to learn to follow a man on the street, in raliroad trains, on the street, in hotels, picking him up and dropping him and picking him up again, without ever being seen or suspected himself. We kept track of McManigle and Jim McNamara in that way for months. Our men even followed them on a hunting trip, and troped them, as we say—made friends with them, as we say—made friends with them, and camped and hunted with them. McManigle has told us since that they never saw a sign of the event and to see if any one shadowing them. And they were always 'testing' themselves. They would turn a corner and then hide and watch to see if any one was follow.

December brings us the shortest days and the coldest nights; the dreariest landscapes and the sweetest promise. As Edna Dean Proctor expresses it: but many a man is justified in enquiring where his is.

ieaders of men! Consider how they have been hammered into moral form as a tool is fashioned on an anvil! Washington's greatness was developed not only by the assaults of his British foes, but by the stupid oppositions of the Continental congress, Grant's military genius shone to its limit only under the superiative strategy of his great antagonist, Les. Beecher never knew what an orator he was till the Liverpool mob began to hiss him.

The reason you and I need to ponder these great souls is because their experience is duplicated in our own. Each one of us is pretty sure to come upon a perience is duplicated in our own, Each one of us is pretty sure to come upon a line of oppositions proportionate to his strength. If I plain John Smith, am not called upon to batter down the denfenses of Vicksburg or silence a howing mob. I may at least have to wrestle with a punctured tire or an unreasonable boss. I meet an opposition commensurate with my powers.

Whether the enemy be a man, or a circumstance, or an unworthy habit, it is pretty certain that my moral muscle is going to be developed by contact with him. One is never quite so surely his best and strongest self as they had been and strongest self as surely his best and strongest self as when he is resolutely breasting a current that sets the other way. All the great promises of Revelation are vouchsafed not to the deserter but to "him that overcometh."

Don't pity yourself, then, beyond measure, even when the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune" are coming your way. It may be that brickbats are sometimes better for you than bouquets. They will make you alert, resourceful, energetic. They will evoke your full powers to such a degree that you can at least understand what the opstle meant when be said that he could "glory in tribulation also."
